3:00 p.m 4:30 p.m.	unsustainable electrical grid impedes their ability to serve and protect their communities and to make progress in preserving the health of their land through decarbonization efforts. As the climate changes, extreme hot and cold temperatures are adding stress to the grid and exacerbating pollution, while major weather events are increasing the frequency and severity of power outages that can devastate vulnerable, rural communities. In this session, attendees will learn that, by generating their own electricity through microgrid energy servers, tribes can become independent of an outdated external power source and polluting back-up diesel generators; provide highly-reliable energy to their communities; save or even make money; and shrink their carbon footprint. This is a pathway to meaningful energy sovereignty.  Panelists:  • Jennifer Colosimo, Midi Enterprises, LLC  • Blair Gallagher, Midi Enterprises, LLC	Isanti 3

Participants will walk away with a blueprint of the plan, our data, and answers from our panel to determine what direction your district wants to go, compare what you are already doing, or ideas that may work for your district. #### 6:30 p.m.

About Areas of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC) and Other Next Steps

This session will focus on continuing a dialogue with Tribal stakeholders to explore the details of a potential regulation to protect mature and old growth forests in more depth and additional opportunities for collaboration and formal support. We are prioritizing outreach both with Tribes that expressed some skepticism about our thoughts and those that expressed enthusiasm. We believe in a transparent process and would like to brief participants of our efforts and facilitate a discussion focused on Tribal priorities on protections and regulations they would like to see included in a draft rule.

Additionally, on March 30, 2023, the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) announced a draft Public Lands Rule that establishes a framework for managing BLM lands to ensure healthy landscapes, abundant wildlife habitat, clean water, and balanced decision-making. This rulemaking is a generational opportunity to improve how the largest land manager in the nation will address conservation, restoration, and resilience activities. In this session, panelists will provide a briefing on this proposed rule and will facilitate a discussion on how to support Tribal Nations seeking to engage in the public comment period by making resources available such as draft comments and an analysis of the drafted rule.

	• Q&A
5:00 p.m 6:30 p.m.	Native Elders and Alzheimer's Disease Related Dementias (ADRD): What the Research Does and Does Not Tell Us  American Indians / Alaska Natives (AIAN) constitute 2.9% of the U.S. population, but are at an increased risk for dementia relative to other populations— 1 of every 3 AIAN elders will develop dementia in the next 20 years. Despite this fact, AIANs are substantially underrepresented in ADRD research. This session will share about this important work, and create a safe space for dialogue and feedback from tribal leaders about ADRD research happening in Tribal Nations across the U.S., which is important for ADRD researchers and tribal leaders to be aware of, bring to their communities, and contribute to the advancement of this work. # *FCC Technical Assistance / Training Session: National Broadband Map/Broadband Data Collection

The FCC's National Broadband Map provides information about the internet services available to individual locations across the country, along with new maps of mobile coverage, as reported by Internet Service Providers (ISPs) in the FCC's ongoing Broadband Data Collection (BDC). The FCC is on track to launch an updated version of the current maps in Spring 2023 based on updated location data and availability data as-of December 31, 2022.

3:00 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.

The BDC invites stakeholders to participate in efforts to verify and validate both the locations on the map and the broadband availability data submitted by ISPs in order to refine and improve the data shown on the maps. Along with the FCC's own verification efforts, stakeholders may file challenges to the data depicted on the maps. Participation in the challenge processes by governmental entities (and Tribal entities in particular), as well as consumers, service providers, and third parties will help ensure that each iteration of the map evolves to more accurately represent the facts on the ground.

In this session on the BDC, FCC staff will review the ways that Tribal governments and entities can participate in the BDC and, in doing so, help improve the accuracy of the maps. Staff will focus on the various challenge processes created as part of the BDC and demonstrate how to engage with the National Broadband Map.

3:00 p.m 4:30 p.m.	How the Center for Indian Country Development at the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis Can Support Your Tribal Nation  The mission of the Center for Indian Country Development (CICD) at the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis is to support the prosperity of Native nations and Indigenous communities through actionable data and research that make substantial contributions to public policy. Join members of the CICD team for a breakout session with two goals: Introducing attendees to some recent data tools, and gathering input to shape the next one. This session is intended to bring together a broad audience: Anyone who uses data—or would like to use it—for planning, reporting, grant writing, economic development, or general knowledge purposes in Indian Country.	Isanti 2
3:00 p.m 4:30 p.m.	The Positive Impacts of Relative Caregivers on Native Children  Research affirms what American Indian/Alaska Native people have always known to be true: children do better when they are raised with family. Studies show that children who can't stay in their own homes have better educational, health, and social outcomes with relative caregivers than they do in foster care with strangers. This is especially important for Native children. One percent of children in the U.S. are American Indian or Alaska Native, yet 2% of children in foster care are Native, and 8% of children living with relative caregivers are Native.  In this session, participants will learn about the newly-established Grandfamilies and Kinship Care Network, a federally-funded national technical assistance center for tribes and states led by Generations United, and the National Indian Child Welfare Association's role in it. Relative caregivers will share their experience raising relative children, including the joys and challenges. They will highlight their needs, including services and supports that would better assist them in caring for their relative children. Strategies for aligning tribal child welfare policy with the	Isanti 3 needs of relative caregivers will also be shared. Opportunities for technical assistance and resources to support tribes and states in better coordinating their services to support relative caregivers will also be shared.

-	Uplifting Tribal Sovereignty through Just Transition: Support for Tribal Renewable Energy Goals  Since 2010, GRID Alternatives' has worked with tribal communities across the United States to support their renewable energy goals and visions for a sustainable future through tribal focused programs. Since 2018, the Tribal Solar Accelerator Fund (TSAF), a tribal-led program has partnered with 65+ tribes and 40+ tribal individuals to support renewable energy development and leadership development goals. Over the last four years, the TSAF has provided tribes with access to philanthropic capital through competitive grantmaking and leadership development programs. At its core, TSAF is about more than just regranting; it's about mobilizing and developing tribal solar projects and integrating workforce development and training, nation-building, and strengthening the energy resilience of tribal communities with visions for a clean energy outlook for generations to come. The upfront expenses to install and maintain solar systems are out of reach for many tribal communities, which is why TSAF funding has been critical to each grantee we have supported.  Tribal leaders, tribal organizations and everyone in between will learn about the unique and innovative ways the TSAF tribal partners are building solar energy capacity in their communities. 3:00 p.m 4:30 p.m.	Water Over Nickel: Protecting Indigenous Communities and Environments from the Negative Impacts of Mining  The push to electrify vehicles is critical to meeting national and international goals to reduce emissions and slow global warming. But the materials—like nickel—used to produce electric vehicle batteries are often mined from the earth using environmentally damaging practices. And 97% of nickel deposits in the U.S. are located within 35 miles of Native American reservations. While advancements in green technology are critical to protecting our planet from the	Owatonna 2 effects of climate change, we must ensure these advancements do not endanger our natural resources or indigenous communities.  Water Over Nickel aims to raise collective awareness of the risks associated with the Tamarack Mine, a nickel mine proposed by Talon Metals Corp. The proposed mine is located just 1.3 miles from the homes of tribal members at Round Lake, and near cultural sites and resources, including Rice Lake and Sandy Lake. The discussion will focus on the risks nickel mines like the proposed Tamarack Mine pose to tribal communities and the Mille Lacs Band's approach to holding Talon Metals accountable to protect their cultural resources, people, land, wild rice and water.
