Feuerstein shakes hands with one of his employees Thursday.

Mill workers displaced by fire love their boss

By Robin Extein

LAWRENCE, Mass. — It's getting to be that every time the president of the mill compañ tells to his employees, they start to cry. They love him.

On Thursday, hundreds of factory workers gathered in cheers as Aaron Feuerstein announced that he would continue paying salaries and benefits to the approximately 1,900 workers who have been displaced by the fire that devastated the Maloney Mill Industries in Methuen on Monday night.

"I'm doing it for us," said Teresa Perkins, who, even on weekends, would run up to her boss to give him a big hug.

"You're a saint!" Perkins yelled.

"I love you, Aaron," another worker yelled.

"Why am I doing it? I consider the employees standing in front of me the most valuable asset that this company has," Feuerstein said.

I don't consider them like some companies do, an expense that can be cut. I know in the long run that what I'm doing today will always be remembered," Feuerstein said.

Feuerstein said he would make Maloney Mills history as the company that "gave them a second chance, a second chance to be employed."
Many of the topics included in the Pardes curriculum are far-reaching and have broad ramifications. The intent of Pardes is to promote sensitivity and spiritual growth through exposure to a variety of Torah sources. It is not within the purview of Pardes to arrive at conclusions relevant to decisions of Halacha. Please consult your Rabbi for personal decisions.

Point to Ponder

The Jewish people present a unique phenomenon.

One would expect the amount a particular group, race or religion to appear in the press, receive Nobel awards and generally be visible to the world population to be in proportion with their size as a people. Statistically, however, with Jews this is not the case.

How can we explain the disproportionate amount of attention the State of Israel, the Jewish businessman and the general Jewish culture receive?

Why do Jews make news?
It is customary to recite the following prayer before entering into a Torah discussion:

(Shulchan Aruch O.H. 110)

May it be Your will, Hashem my G-d and G-d of my fathers, that You illuminate my eyes with the light of your Torah and that You save me from all stumbling blocks and errors, whether it be in discussions of what is prohibited and what is permitted or in monetary matters, whether it be in any other Halachic decisions or just in theoretical study. I pray that I do not make any mistakes, and if I do, my study partners should not take delight in them. I pray that I should not proclaim the impure, the pure, the permitted, the forbidden, or the forbidden permitted. I pray that I should not derive joy from the errors of my study partner. Open my eyes and allow me to see the wonders of Your Torah because it is from G-d that all wisdom comes forth, it is from His mouth that I will acquire wisdom and understanding. Amen.

1 Twenty-two hundred years ago a great rabbi, Shimon ben Shetach, bought a mule. He brought the mule home, and his students discovered a valuable gem hanging around its neck. All those around him rejoiced at the rabbi’s good fortune. God has answered his prayers! Shimon ben Shetach took the jewel and went immediately back to the merchant to return the jewel. The merchant looked at him with amazement and proclaimed with misery, “It is clearly your jewel — you bought the mule.” The rabbi argued and said, “No, it is yours — I bought a mule, I didn’t buy a jewel.” Upon hearing the words of the rabbi, the merchant exclaimed, “Blessed be the God of Shimon ben Shetach!”

2 Abraham asked G-d, why is it necessary for me to move from place to place, community to community? G-d said. Consider yourself as a box of fragrant spices. If it stands in one place it exudes no fragrance. If it moves from place to place its fragrance fills the air.

At forty years old, Abraham discovered his Creator. He began to debate God and bring proof of His existence to all who lived around him. When he won the debates, the King decreed to kill him, but a miracle happened and he was saved, and he went to Haran. It was there he began to teach the entire world about the existence of God and the importance of worshipping Him. He traveled from city to city until he came to the land of Canaan. Thousands of people seeked out his wisdom and learned about God. These people are referred to as the ‘House of Abraham’. Abraham taught everything to his son, Isaac, who in turn taught it to his son, Jacob. They each taught their generation and all of the world.

It was the beginning of the 20th century. Jews en masse traveled to visit the famous sage, Leo Tolstoy, to search for a wisdom for life and guidance for the future. Amongst them was a young lady. When she stood before Tolstoy, he asked her, “What are you searching for?” She answered, “I am searching for God.” The sagacious elder stood before her and said, “Three thousand years ago, your nation gave the entire world God. Now you come to me to search for Him?”

From the book—L’Maala Min HaShemesh

...I will insist that the Hebrews have done more to civilize men than any other nation. If I were an atheist and believed in blind eternal fate, I should still believe that fate had ordained the Jews to be the most essential instrument for civilizing the nations. ...I believe that chance had ordered the Jews to preserve and propagate to all mankind the doctrine of a supreme, intelligent, wise almighty sovereign of the universe, which I believe to be the great essential principle of all morality, and consequently of all civilization...

From a letter written by John Adams, the second President of the United States, to F.A. Van der Kemp (1808)

We are commanded to sanctify His name... We do so by spreading our true belief in Him and his teachings to the entire world, never fearing any consequences... Our Sages tell us that it was for this reason we were taken out of Egypt, in order to sanctify His name in public.

If the statistics are right, the Jews constitute but one percent of the human race. It suggests a nebulous dim puff of star dust lost in the blaze of the Milky Way. Properly the Jew ought hardly to be heard of; but he is heard of, has always been heard of. He is as prominent on the planet as any other people, and his commercial importance is extravagantly out of proportion to the smallness of his bulk. His contributions to the world’s list of great names in literature, science, art, music, finance, medicine, and abstruse learning, are also way out of proportion to the weakness of his numbers. He has made a marvelous fight in this world, in all the ages; and has done it with his hands tied behind him. He could be vain of himself, and he excused for it. The Egyptian, the Babylonian, and the Persian rose, filled the planet with sound and splendor, then faded to dream-stuff and passed away; the Greek and the Roman followed, and made a vast noise, and they are gone; other peoples have sprung up and held their torch high for a time, but it burned out, and they sit in twilight now, or have vanished. The Jew saw them all, beat them all, and is now what he always was, exhibiting no decadence, no infirmities of age, no weakening of his parts, no slowing of his energies, no dulling of his alert and aggressive mind. All things are mortal but the Jew; all other forces pass, but he remains. What is the secret of his immortality?

From the article “Concerning the Jews” (Harpers, 1899) in “The Complete Essays of Mark Twain” (Doubleday, 1963), pg. 249

8 Rise, shine; for your light has come, and the glory of the Lord has risen upon you. Because darkness shall cover the earth and its population; but the Lord shall shine upon you, and His glory shall be seen upon you. Nations shall walk in your light, and kings shall walk in the brightness you shed...

9 Sixty years ago, a man in Lithuania went to the post office to buy some stamps. When he came home, he realized that the postman had given him too much change. He went to Rabbi Yaacov Kaminetzky and asked whether he was entitled to keep the money. The rabbi told him to quickly run to the post office and return the money. A day later, the rabbi was asked the same question by another Jew and again by another. Finally, Reb Yaacov went to the postmaster and began to lecture him. He said, “You are obviously trying to trick the Jews into not returning the money. It will never happen, we are guided by the Torah.”

A few years later, during the Nazi occupation, the postman was promoted to higher authority and was responsible for saving and hiding hundreds of Jews. When asked about his behavior, he said the Jews are a good people and referred to the overpayment in the post office.
A Final Thought

When God created the world, He created the Jews to be different. “You shall be a nation of priests, a holy nation” (Exodus 19:6).

A priest is one who sets standards, who teaches the world how to behave. A priest must be center stage in order to do his job. For God’s plan to be successful, He had to place us in the spotlight of creation. We are not only the focal point of the world, which is demonstrated by the tremendous attention given the Jewish people and the State of Israel in the media, but we are in fact the hub of the wheel. One slight turn on our part will effect the world.

The main purpose of being the nerve center of civilization is, of course, to teach the world good. And that we did. 3,000 years ago the Jews taught the world about basic morals. Do not murder, steal, covet or lie. These virtues are today universally accepted as self evident. These universally accepted morals originated when a fraction of the world population accepted these principles in a wilderness. What we do today, positive or negative, will not only be disproportionately noticed but will effect the entire world in which we live and all of the future as it unfolds.
Maimonides, Book of Mitzvos, Mitzvah 9

8 Isaiah 60:1-3

והם אחריכם עד שיבואם בשלום.
