Pivigo is seeking a

Product Manager

with immediate start date.

Introduction:
At Pivigo we are building the leading marketplace for data science. With our five years of experience running Europe's first, largest and most successful data science bootcamp, and our current web portal, we are deeply involved with the data science community. We are now looking for an experienced developer to join our dynamic and creative team, to use their knowledge and motivation to help us continue to innovate and deliver a series of new, engaging features for data scientists. If you want to be a leading figure in shaping our exciting product and use your knowledge about building great web applications to create a unique, online experience for the data science community, this is for you!

We work in a small team with a lot of input from others in the company. We rely heavily on coffee and laughs to keep us happy and sane. The position is ideal for someone who has a passion for building the right product and is a great communicator, working with everyone in our organisation.

What we are looking for:
We are looking someone who puts the user at the centre of everything they do. At the same time, as product manager, you will be data driven in your approach, relying more on data than opinions. You should be self-motivated and results-driven, with understanding of the agile software development cycle, specifically for web applications. We are all always eager to learn more and you should be open to learn a lot about data science and the technologies we use to build our product.

As product manager you will have some experience with web application development, specifically at least some of the following:
- track-record of developing web products
- working in cross-functional teams
- making data-driven decisions
- design and UX
