

Things are never just inert objects, passive items or lifeless shucks, but consist of tensions, forces, hidden powers, all being constantly exchanged.

We Are All in This Together is an exhibition exploring the concept of fuzziness. Students at the Royal College of Art, across all disciplines, have responded to this theme by capitalising on the indeterminate nature of things. Their responses push the object into new spheres of understanding. The undoing of fixed narratives that bind the object relations we encounter daily produces a fresh interpretation of what it means to exist in a world undergoing profound change. Bringing attention to the indeterminate fuzziness of how we understand the hidden nature of this transition, each work seeks to uncover new accounts of a changing landscape. So, whether you understand this as the 4th industrial revolution, or the possible 6th mass extinction, it doesn't matter because whatever it is, we are all this together.
