The U.S. Team registered an historic performance at Whistling Straits with a record-setting 19-9 win, which marked the largest margin of victory since Continental Europe began playing in the Ryder Cup in 1979. The U.S. began the final day with an 11-5 lead and claimed eight of 12 possible points available Sunday.

Needing just 3½ points out of 12 during the final session of matches, the U.S. Team did not leave the result in doubt for long. Patrick Cantlay and Bryson DeChambeau scored early wins over Shane Lowry and Sergio Garcia, respectively, while captain's pick Scottie Scheffler had the crowds around Whistling Straits buzzing after knocking off world No. 1 and previously undefeated Jon Rahm. Collin Morikawa clinched victory for the U.S. with his tie against Viktor Hovland, a result that pushed the American total to 14½.

Rory McIlroy beat Xander Schauffele in the opening match, while Ian Poulter and Lee Westwood each scored wins over Tony Finau and Harris English, respectively. But the other nine matches each included at least a half point for the home side, including a 1-up victory by Daniel Berger over Matt Fitzpatrick in the final match. That gave the Americans 19 points, a total not reached since the format changed in 1979. On three prior occasions (U.S. in 1981, Europe in 2004 and 2006) a Team had won by an 18½-9½ score.
