Paul McGinley
Europe Captain

Played in Scotland for the first time since Muirfield in 1973, the Europeans were riding a two-match-winning streak with a captain in Paul McGinley who was part of both previous victories as vice captain. The Ryder Cup at Medinah was two years’ past, but American captain Tom Watson was banking on his team using what happened outside of Chicago as fuel.

It didn’t take long to see McGinley’s plan materialize, as he maneuvered his players brilliantly the first two days, taking a commanding 4-point lead into the Sunday singles. Their buffer was due primarily to a 7-1 run in points in foursomes, which included six European victories and two halves. The American spoke on Saturday night about extinguishing the deficit as they had done at The Country Club in 1999, but they could never seize the momentum on Sunday, losing the Ryder Cup for a third successive time, 16½ to 11½.
