

SECTOR TO LAND USE MAPPING

1. Economic statistics and forecasts tell us nothing directly about employment space, because they do not classify jobs according to the type of space they occupy. Rather, the statistics split jobs into economic sectors (industries and services), according to the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC). To estimate how many jobs will be based in offices and industrial space, and how many in 'non-B' spaces such as retail premises, schools and hospitals, we need to translate sectors into land uses.
2. For this, we have used a method developed by the PBA team (formerly Roger Tym & Partners) over a series of employment land reviews, and tested in a large-scale study of the Yorkshire and Humber region in 2010<sup>1</sup>. To our knowledge there is no other published empirical research on the relationship between activity sectors and land uses.
3. The tables below show the sectors that are classified to industrial (subdivided into manufacturing and warehousing) and offices respectively. The names and numbers that identify each activity sector are from the UK Standard Classification of Economic Activities 2007 (SIC 2007)<sup>2</sup>. These tables aggregate the data from the finest grain 5 digit SIC level which is the base for the mapping. The reason we use the 5-digit level is that within each sector there may be activities that are industrial based and others that are office or manufacturing. Further on in this note we cite construction activity as an example of a sector containing different land use activities.
4. The Annex that follows drills down to the lowest level SIC (5-digit categories) that is used to build up to the sectors. For each of the 700 SIC 5-digit job class/sub-classes we identify the appropriate employment land use. Many of the SIC classes are non-B uses, and the Annex includes only the SICs in B use classes. The Annex also identifies the corresponding job category in the Experian Economic forecast data.

Note

SIC 78, Employment Activities, covers workers employed through agencies in all activity sectors. They should be redistributed across the whole economy, both to B-class sectors and other sectors, in proportion to each sector's share of total employment

5. On a technical note, most economic forecasts show around 20-30 broad activity sectors, a much coarser-grained classification than the SIC sectors in the table above, and the 5 digit SIC level we use that is set out in the Annex below. For example, the table counts as a B-space activity only part of the Construction industry (SIC 43.2, 43.3 and 43.9), whereas forecasts typically show only Construction as a whole (SIC 43). To estimate future employment in sub-sectors such as SIC 43.2, we assume that the share of each sub-sector's employment in its 'parent' sector stays constant.
6. There are two further technical difficulties with the relationship of sectors to land uses. The first is that the line between production space (factories and workshops) and warehousing is blurred. This is not surprising, because manufacturing and warehousing largely occupy the same kinds of buildings, many units combine both functions in proportions that vary over time, and smaller buildings are allowed to shift between the two without planning permission.
7. In setting total land provision targets, therefore, factories, workshops and warehouses, should be merged into a single 'industrial' category. This should not cause any problems, because these uses operate in similar buildings and at similar employment densities, except for very large units including strategic warehousing. In areas where they form a significant part of the stock, these large units should be allowed for separately.
8. The other problem with the tables is that some of the jobs which the table allocates to industrial space are in fact in offices. These jobs are probably in administration, sales and marketing functions of industrial and related businesses. A construction or plumbing business, for example, will often have an office that deals with orders, appointments, record-keeping and the like. In some cases this will be ancillary to an industrial unit and therefore not count as office space, but in other cases it will be free-standing. If the business is small, the office may be its only premises.
9. In total, the Yorkshire and Humber survey found that around one tenth of the jobs which our method allocates to industrial space (factories, workshops and warehouses) are in fact in offices. For a large area such as the region, this is too small a proportion to distort land provision targets. But in some local authority areas, especially the more highly urbanised, it is likely that the distortion is significant. Employment land reviews should aim to correct these distortions, using local knowledge to adjust the relationships shown in the tables above.
10. There are many other, place-specific factors why the sector-to-land-use relationships in the tables above may be invalid. For example, in some places large business units are assigned to the wrong sector or the wrong side of the local authority boundary. In other places, particular sectors are untypical and do not occupy the kinds of space that one would normally expect. In one local authority area in England, for example, there are many jobs classified to Other Supporting Land Transport Activities, SIC 52.21, which normally would occupy warehousing in the local authority area. But in this case most of the SIC 52.21 jobs relate to railway maintenance and the people concerned work all over the country, mostly outdoors.
11. Where such anomalies arise, close inspection of the numbers, combined with local knowledge, should help correct the statistics and customise the sector-to-land-use assumptions.

12. However, it is inevitable that sector-to-land-use relationships are less reliable for small than larger areas. As the Yorkshire and Humber survey illustrated, the relationships shown in our tables work very well for whole regions. But they are not reliable for individual buildings or employment areas, and may not be reliable at local authority level. This is one of the reasons why demand forecasts are more robust for regions than individual local authority areas.
13. The Yorkshire and Humber report provides further information and advice on sector-to-land-use relationships.
14. The schedule that follows identifies the land use class for the SIC 5-digit (the finest grain SIC data) job categories.
