

WINDOW PAIN
Written by Rachael Colley

EMAIL: RACHAEL.COLLEY00@GMAIL.COM

1. EXT. STREET. AFTERNOON

It's a grey, wet and gloomy day and there's very few people walking about. On a corner of the street, a woman, for the sake of things let's call her LAUREN (late 30's to early 40's), is walking slightly hunched to protect herself from the rain. She looks both left and right before crossing the street and just as she is 3/4 of the way, she suddenly slams into something that she nor the audience can see.

LAUREN
SON OF A BI-

BRIAN walks onto screen, he is around the same age as Lauren.

BRIAN
Birds. Bees. Flies and countless other animals have wings and they use those wings to fly. They go around minding their own business then SLAM, right into a window. An invisible shield blocking them from the oasis that is the outdoors. How would you feel if you, like Lauren here, were suddenly stopped when simply walking along?

Just then, Lauren, who can't understand what she's just walked into, attempts to walk forward again. She ends up doing the exact same thing.

LAUREN
MOTHER FUC-

BRIAN
For insects to thrive, we need to change. Join me on the fight to a windowless society.

Lauren, now worried, starts frantically banging against these invisible walls while Brian smiles brightly to camera.

The call to action www.windowlessociety.com/join appears on screen.

FADE TO BLACK.